

a new vision of Palestinian sovereignty in order to facilitate a strategy of resistance against Israeli effort of elimination.

Mouin Rabbani briefly details the ongoing dispossession of the Palestinian people in “The 1967 June War and the Palestinian National Movement,” and simultaneously traces the role of Palestinians in the post-colonial. He concludes that the Palestinian national movement that arose after 1967 has been disintegrating ever since, but that it must be reinvigorated to bring about the ultimate liberation of the Palestinian people.

In “What is Special about Israel?” Ran Greenstein details the unprecedented establishment of the Israeli state during the nakhba, and how the war of 1967 both affirmed and simultaneously reversed some of the settler colonial state-building projects that Israel was occupied with for both the newly-captured West Bank and Gaza. He finds, ultimately, that the specific ethnic, political, and diplomatic conditions of Israel ultimately allow it to insist it is justified in enforcing an apartheid regime.

With all of the articles presented here, we hope to bring about a more profound understanding of the 1967 Six Day War and its aftereffects for the region, and particularly for the Palestinian conscience. We hope you find these articles as informative, and as affective, as we do.

October 24. A UN-arranged meeting between IDF Lt. Gen. Haim Bar-Lev and Egyptian Brigadier General Bashir Sharif in Sinai, via Wikimedia Commons.

FORUM ON ARAB AND MUSLIM AFFAIRS

Forum on Arab and Muslim Affairs (FAMA) is the research arm of the Arab Studies Institute (ASI). It produces and oversees ASI's research projects and initiatives on overarching issues related to the Arab and Muslim worlds. The forum is the home of ASI's Knowledge Production Project, the Political Economy Project, and the Refugees and Migrants Project, among others.

Learn more about FAMA:

famanow.org

